20 TOP ROCK STARS Where are they NOW?

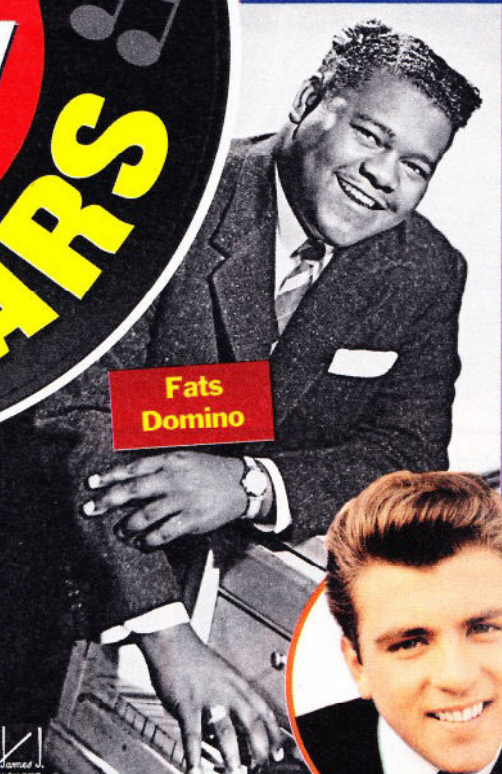

ROCK AND ROLL is as popular as ever with classic tunes being pumped out on radio stations across the country. But what became of the legendary musicians and singers whose hits thrilled teens in the '60s, '70s and '80s? GLOBE has tracked down the icons of rock and found out what happened to them since they released their hits decades ago.

Fats Domino
HURRICANE SURVIVOR

THE 83-year-old rock legend literally rose from the grave after reports wrongly said he died in Hurricane Katrina. Instead, the New Orleans native was miraculously airlifted to safety by a helicopter in 2005. Still, Fats admitted, "We've lost everything." The roly-poly singer-pianist of '50s monster hits Blueberry Hill, Ain't That a Shame and I'm Walking went on to perform two more years before calling it quits. While Bill Haley's Rock Around the Clock is called the first rock 'n' roll hit, many historians say Fats' 1949 recording, The Fat Man, was the original. The icon continues to live in New Orleans.

Sinead O'Connor
LOOKING FOR LOVE

ONCE a slender beauty with a shaved head, the 44-year-old songbird now has hair but is frumpy and dumpy. And her love life's still a mess. A mom of four kids with four different men, the singer of the '90s hit Nothing Compares 2 U claimed she was a lesbian in 2000. But on her blog, she complains that she can't find a man and is "desperate for sex." While the Irish rebel, who

THE Big Yellow Taxi singer needs all she can get as she battles the bizarre Morgellons disease that can sprout painful sores and rashes on her body. A star since her 1968 debut album with hits Both Sides Now and Chelsea Morning, the Canadian songbird and polio survivor notes that "Morgellons is always diagnosed as a 'delusion of parasites' and they send you to a psychiatrist." But Joni is convinced it's real. "I have this weird, incurable disease that seems like it's from outer space," says the 67-year-old singer. "Fibers in a variety of colors protrude out of my skin like mushrooms after a rainstorm. They cannot be forensically identified as animal, vegetable or mineral."

Eric Clapton
HEALING HEARTACHE

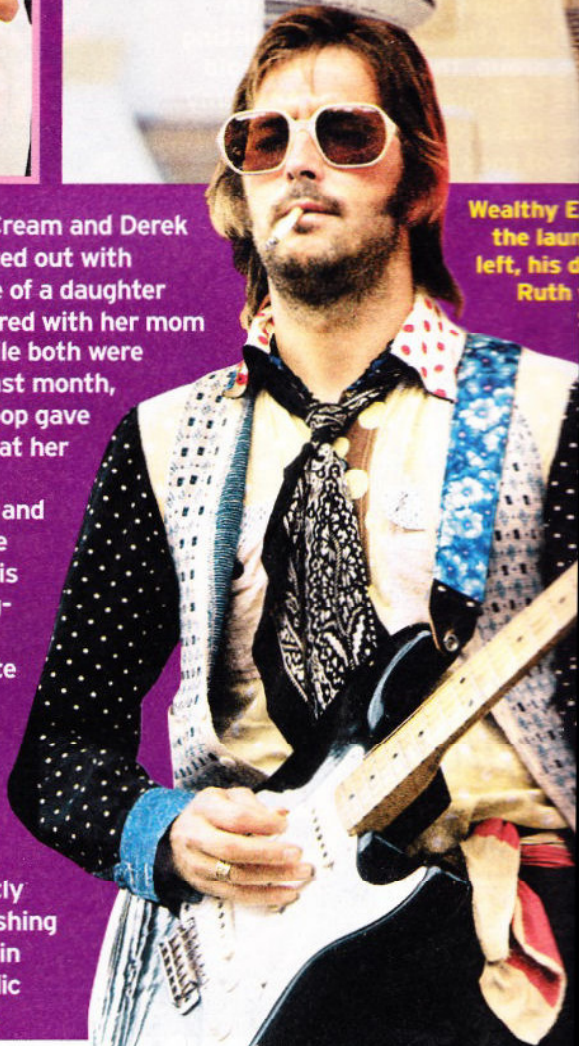

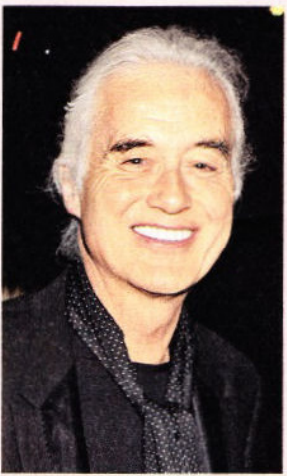

THE guitar bandit, who musically boasts I Shot the Sheriff, has found love with a new family after surviving a parent's most devastating heartbreak - the loss of a young child. The 66-year-old rocker is married to artist Melia McEnery, 35, and is a devoted dad to their daughters - Julie Rose, 10, Ella Mae, 8, and Sophie, 6. But 20 years ago, he was shattered when his 4-year-old son Conor plunged to his death from his mother's New York City apartment. The Cream and Derek and the Dominoes legend, who started out with The Yardbirds, also hid the existence of a daughter Ruth (photo inset), now 25, he fathered with her mom Yvonne while both were married. Last month, the proud pop gave Ruth away at her wedding in September and sang for the guests at his Surrey, England, mansion. Despite making millions, Clapton likes to live simply and was even recently spotted washing his clothes in an L.A. public laundromat.

Jimmy Page
PLAGUED BY BACK WOES

THESE days when Led Zeppelin's guitarist strums Stairway to Heaven - the world's No. 1 classic rock song - it's with an aching back. The 67-year-old former heroin junkie and boozier was recently spotted picking up special back and neck cushions at the Relax the Back shop in Plantation, Fla. "So much for sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll. Jimmy's main concern is keeping limber," says a source. His back problems stem from playing his heavy double-neck guitar. The pain intensified over the years and kept him from touring in 2000. The one-time "wildest man in rock" and member of The Yardbirds was known for his trysts with rock groupies. Now he is a dad of three with third wife Jimena and last year released a limited edition of his autobiography. In July, he made a surprise appearance at The Black Crowes concert in London.
